RACE, adj. Ken. [rēs.] Level, even; only used in the comb. Race measure, see below.

Ken.$^{1}$; Ken.$^{2}$ Full measure is 21 to the score, as of corn, coals, &c.; and race measure is but 20. But it must be observed that 'full' in this case has no allusion to the number 21 which is greater than 20, but to the manner of admeasurement; as conceive, when the bushel is upheap'd 'tis full; when struck with strickle and even'd 'tis race 'measure.'.. Afterwards, they measured all by race, and allowed one at the score, as an equivalent recompence for so many full bushels.

[Fr. mesure rase, level measure (Cotgr.).]

Dmf. 'Raise-nets,' so called from their rising and falling with the tide, are placed in situations where there is a runner or lake near the shore, with a bank or ridge of sand on the opposite side. A number of stakes of various lengths extending from near high-water-mark through the lake, in a curved direction, to the opposite bank, are driven into the beach or sand. The net is fixed on the top of the stakes by ropes, but is loose at bottom, being stretched on frames, which rise in the flood and fall of the ebb-tide or the reverse as the ground may require, Agric. Surv. 605 (Jam.); The fourth method is called raise-net fishing.—It is so called from the lower part of the net rising and floating upon the water with the flowing tide and setting down with the ebb. This is also called 'lake-fishing,' Statist. Acc. II. 16, 17 (ib.).

Bnff.$^{1}$ It has also the name of 'kings.' Abd. Sides are chosen, and a line made across the play-ground. One of the sides goes up, and the other goes down, and throws their bonnets on the ground. Then one side tries to get one of the opposite side across the line, and crown him, and one of the opposite side tries to crown him back. If another boy can catch this player before he gets near him, he is crowned also. All the time the one side is trying to take the bonnets, Gomme Games (1898) II. 106; Whatever game your heart could wus, Or 'Huntie,' 'Steenie,' 'Rangiebus,' Cadenhead Bon-Accord (1853) 199; A line is drawn, say, across a field, and an equal number of boys are ranged on each side of this line. The caps of each party are scattered away at a good distance from the line, and the game is to recover the caps. The boys dodge each other for a chance to cross the line. If a boy runs and picks up a cap, although caught by a boy on the other side, he goes back to his old place by giving up the cap. If he can pick up two or more before capture, one sets him free, and the others are trophies for his side. If caught before he can pick up a cap, he is a prisoner, and can only gain his liberty when some of his own side can take a cap or two, and set him free from the spot on which he was caught by touching him (A.W.).

RAPIER-DANCE, sb. Yks. Also in form raper-donce. A dance gen. performed about Christmas-time; see below.

w.Yks. The performers are usually dressed in a white frock, or covered with a shirt, to which, as also to their hats, or paper helmets, are appended long black ribbons. They frequently go from house to house, about Christmas, and are treated with ale after their military exercise. At merry nights, and on other festive occasions, they are introduced one after another by the names and titles of heroes, from Hector and Paris, Princes of Troy, down to Guy of Warwick. A spokesman then repeats some verses in praise of each, and they begin to flourish the rapier. On a signal given, all the weapons are united, or interlaced, but soon withdrawn again, and brandished by the heroes, who exhibit a great variety of evolutions, being usually accompanied by slow music. In the last scene, the rapiers are united round the neck of a person kneeling in the centre, and when they are suddenly withdrawn, the victim falls to the ground; he is afterwards carried out, and a mock funeral is performed with pomp and solemn strains, Willan List Wds. (1811).

Yks. They're oop te Ratt'ning again, Fetherston T. Goorkrodger (1870) 115. w.Yks. The murders which these men sometimes commit are perpetrated by a process known under the name of rattaning. The grinder in Sheffield performs his daily labour seated across a sort of wooden bench, known by the name of the Horse, the place which would be that of the lowest part of the horse's neck being the position of the grinding stone which is sent round with the greatest velocity by a mill. The stone is made steady upon its iron spindle by means of wedges so far as slightly to crack the stone. The effect is that soon after the stone is put into its full motion, it separates, the pieces flying off as though sent from the mouth of a cannon, and the unhappy workman, bending in unconsciousness over the instrument of his destruction, experiences a most horrible death, Vaughan Age of Gt. Cities (ed. 1843) in N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xii. 145; Mostly applied to two processes: 1. Taking away, hiding, or destroying the bands or straps which connect the grinding-stones, &c. with the machinery, and by means of which they are rapidly made to revolve on their axes. 2. Taking away the nuts or screw-bolts by which a pair of strong circular iron plates are fastened against the two sides of the stones, and which, to a great extent, prevent their breaking, N. & Q. ib. 191; I have been rattened; I had just put a new catgut band upon my lathe, and last night the rats have carried it off, and, I suppose, eaten it, ib. 192; The concealment or destruction of the 'bands' (the straps by which grindstones, &c. are turned), in order to compel some obstinate workman to conform to the 'Union' Rules, ib. 145; A purely Hallamshire word, though the notoriety of trades' outrages has tended to bring it into general, but inaccurate, use. Properly it does not apply to bodily injury. . . To maim a man is not to ratten him; but to take away his wheel-bands is, Sheffield Indep. (1874); Shoo, at t'dead haar at neet, rattand hur, be tipplin hur rain tub ovver, an spilled all hur weshin water, Tom Treddlehoyle Bairnsla Ann. (1868) 43; w.Yks.$^2$ Slang. The cruel villagers 'rattan' two poor women, *Sat. Hence Rattener, sb. one who injures or removes the tools of another.

w.Yks. The process of wedging the stone upon the axle or axle-tree, as it is called, by tightly driving in a number of wooden wedges, was always a source of great danger to the grinder. . . There may have been instances, as stated by Dr. Vaughan, in which these wedges have been purposely driven in tighter by ratteners during the night, but I hope and think they were of comparatively rare occurrence, N. & Q. ib. 191.

5. Water lying near the surface; also in comp. Ream-water.

Per. The 'water' custom of Hogmanay night was to slip from the house when the clock pronounced the doom of the old year, and, pitcher in hand, make for the nearest well in time to secure, before any of your neighbours, what was variously called the 'crap,' the 'floo'er,' and the 'ream' of the water for the New Year. The custom was restricted to the women of the hamlet or homestead; in some localities only the unmarried women. The ream of the well brought good fortune for the year, Haliburton Furth in Field (1894) 29. Lan. At St. Annes the ream water is brackish, and is within a foot or two of the surface, Manch. City News (Nov. 23, 1895); When I came to Birkdale thirty-five years ago the ream lay so near the surface in winter that it was practically 'service water.' . . Of course, the ream does not now lie so close to the surface. It is, I am told by practical men, seldom found nearer the surface than two feet. A few weeks since a man who was digging in a cellar in Birkdale tells me that 'the ream came boiling up when he got down three feet,' ib. (Dec. 7, 1895).

Hence Ream-well, sb. a well of water lying near the surface.

Ir. Trees (which are usually hawthorns) in the raths, raheens, and such early structures, cannot be cut without bringing ill-luck to the occupier of the field, Flk-Lore Rec. (1882) V. 168. N.Cy.$^1$ Nhb.$^1$ Furlongs in the open field system were divided into strips, each of which was separated from its neighbouring strip by a piece of unploughed turf, called a 'balk.' But when a hillside formed part of the open field the strips were almost always made to run, not up and down the hill, but horizontally along it; and in ploughing, the custom for ages was always to turn the sod of the furrow down hill, the plough consequently returning one way idle. The result was that the strips became in time long, level terraces one above the other, and the 'baaks' or 'balks' between them grew into steep, rough banks. These banks . . . are called reens, . . and the word is often applied to the terraces themselves. Dur. Gibson Up-Weardale Gl. (1870); Dur.$^1$ The piece of grass-land between the hedge and the part which is in tillage; the grass of which farmers usually allow cottagers to mow and make hay of. w.Dur.$^1$ Lakel.$^1$ The town fields of Coniston and Torver were divided by such reeans, and every man's division was called his reean; Lakel.$^2$, Cum.$^{14}$ Wm. Things howk'd oot o' cairns an' reaynes, Whitehead Leg. (1859) 43; (A.T.) n.Yks. (T.K.), n.Yks.$^{34}$, ne.Yks.$^1$, m.Yks.$^1$ w.Yks. A heap of stones formed of the stones gathered up from a field once waste common but now reclaimed, this heap or row in many cases forming the boundary or fence of the field (C.W.D.); w.Yks.$^{12}$; w.Yks.$^4$ A line across meadows where has been formerly a hedge or a road is called the rain. ne.Lan.$^1$, Der.$^1$, Nhp.$^1$

REAR, v.$^3$ w.Som.$^1$ [riə(r).] With up: cloth-making term; see below.

In the raw state, i.e. as the cloth comes from the loom, it is full of the oil used in the process of spinning the yarns. A strong alkali is freely sprinkled upon the cloth, which is then beaten up in the mill until the oil and alkali are thoroughly amalgamated, after which the cloth is allowed to lie a few hours until a slight fermentation commences; then it is washed in a machine with clean water, and the cloth is thus cleansed from the grease. The process up to the time of washing is called 'rearing up.'

w.Yks. In playing at any kind of knucking game in marbles, if one hits the taw of an opponent, such an one is said to be 'red.' After becoming 'red' in the game of 'knucks,' it is the object of the player in such a condition to 'get his hoile,' and this he attempts as his turn comes round. The opponent, in the meantime, aims at the taw of the one who is 'red,' and each time tries to hit the taw of the latter before safety is found and the game won by finding security in the 'chuck-hoile,' and if the opponent should be so successful then is 'red ta'en' out of the other, and the condition of being 'red' is thus changed from one to the other, *Leeds Merc. RE·LE STOCKS, phr. Yks. A boys' game; the same as 'bedstocks' (q.v.).

w.Yks. Known at Halifax 40 years ago. It was played exactly as described under Nhb.$^1$ (s.v. Bedstocks). That portion of the description under w.Yks.$^5$ appears to be a mix-up with Spy-o, which was a rather different game (C.C.).

RELEVANT, adj. Sc. [re·livənt.] A law term: valid; sufficient to warrant the conclusion, whether in reference to a libel or to a defence.

Mitchell Scotticisms (1799) 70; The court, if they find the facts libelled not relevant to infer the crime, dismiss the pannel from the bar; if they judge them relevant, they remit the pannel to the knowledge of an inquest, Erskine Instit. B. iv. T. 4, § 91 (Jam.).

Hence Relevancy, sb. the legal sufficiency of the facts stated, in a libel or in a defence, to infer punishment or exculpation.

Mitchell Scotticisms (1799) 70; The practice of the court is, and for many years has been, not to find a special relevancy as to the libel and defences, but to pronounce a general interlocutor, finding the libel relevant, Maclaurin Crim. Cases, Introd. 23–24 (Jam.).

RELIEF, sb. Sc. An ecclesiastical term: congregations of Presbyterians who seceded from the Scottish Established Church to escape the evils of patronage in presentation to livings, and to be free to choose their own ministers; the church of such a congregation. Also used attrib.

RIDDENER, v. and sb. Lin.$^{1}$ [ri·dənə(r).] 1. v. To talk incessantly. 2. sb. Volubility of speech.

RIDDEN MEAL, phr. Obs. Ayr. (Jam.) See below.

A phr. which is frequently met with in old valuations and similar deeds in Ayr. It occurs in an old ballad. 'Your mother's spence it pleases me, But its moichness hurts me sairly; Therefore I'll pay a ridden meal, Although I dine but sparely.' Ridden meal is now explained as denoting the money paid to an incoming tenant for getting the liberty of the farm from Martinmas to Whitsuntide. It is also said that in that part of the country 'It was a law that the outgoing tenant should leave a crop on the land for the benefit of the tenant who succeeded him, and that the consideration given for this was called ridden meal.'

RIDDER, sb. and v.$^{1}$ Oxf. Hrt. Mid. e.Cy. Sus. Hmp. I.W. Wil. Dor. Som. Cor. Also written ridar Cor.$^{2}$; and in forms rudder e. & s.Cy. Hmp.$^{1}$ I.W.$^{1}$ Wil.$^{1}$ Dor. (1) Arg. A woman accused of 'the horrid sin of the hellish art of riddle-turning,' ANDREWS Bygone Ch. Life (1899) 124. (2) Sc. This, among the other superstitious customs common on Halloween, is also used as a mode of divination in regard to marriage. When two persons are evened or named in relation to the connubial tie, if the riddle turns round, it is concluded that they are to be united in this bond (JAM.). Fif., Lth. The riddle is set on its side, the points of a pair of large scissors being so fixed in it (separate from each other) that the riddle may be suspended by the hold taken of it by the scissors. One handle of the scissors is placed on the finger of one person and the other on that of another. Some words, to the same purpose with the following, are repeated: 'By St. Paul and St. Peter, did A.B. steal my yarn?' or what ever is lost. If the person mentioned be innocent the riddle remains motionless; if guilty, it immediately turns round (ib.). Nhb.$^1$ The ancient art of divination by riddle and shears—that is, attempting to discover a culprit or lover by holding a sieve in a pair of scissors or shears, muttering some mystic invocation, and watching the trembling, nodding, or turning of the sieve as the names of suspected persons are uttered, WELFORD Hist. Newc. II. 442. Dur.$^1$ A mode of divination for the discovery of theft. Obsol. (3) Per. Violet Brown . . . was accused for turning the riddle with sheers, ane point of witchcraft and devilry against God's word, LAWSON Bk. of Per. (1847) 191.

(18) Cor. In the district about the Land's End a custom once prevailed known as 'riding the hatch.' Persons suspected of immorality were mounted on the half-door, which was then violently rocked until they fell off. If the accused fell into the house, he was judged to be innocent; if into the street, guilty, Hammond Parish (1897) 268; A countryman, retailing some bit of scandal about an 'unco guid' neighbour, . . remarks, 'He ought to be made to ride the hatch.' To which his companion sarcastically replies, 'If the whole boiling of 'em were made to ride the hatch, I'll wager that more would fall outwards than inwards,' N. & Q. (1857) 2nd S. iv. 143; Twenty years ago 'riding the hatch' was a very familiar expression. The county at that time abounded with Dissenters, especially . . . a sect called Bryanites, and the phr. in question was applied to one of these who had been guilty of any impropriety or moral offence. . . The cottages had small extra doors or gates about three feet high called hatches. . . To the uninitiated it was supposed that the offender was placed astride one of these, which was then swung to and fro until he fell off, and by this ordeal it was determined whether he should or should not be expelled the sect. If he fell inward he was again received as a brother elect, if out-

The ceremony is also resorted to when a woman has gained an improper ascendency over her husband. In this case, it is called 'riding the stang for a neighbour's wife' (s.v. Stang). Nhb. They myed me ride the stang, as suin As aw show'd fyece at wark again, Wilson Pitman's Pay (1843) 56; Nhb.¹ It is, in most parts, an ignominious punishment inflicted on a faithless husband. But, among the pitmen of former times, it was customary to make a man ride the stang as a triumph. The bridegroom was thus bore [sic] along by his fellow pitmen. Dur. A schoolboy's punishment. After a clamorous recitation of the culprit's misdeeds and a sound thrashing, the poor boy was finally bumped against a tombstone specially devoted to the purpose, Henderson Flk-Lore (1879) i. n.Yks. On Monday night the town of Northallerton was in a somewhat excited state on the announcement that the youths of the place were going to 'ride the stang' for a married man and woman, who had, it was alleged, eloped, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1883) I. 58; The ancient custom of 'riding the stang' has been revived. In the three townships of Carlton, West Scrafton, and Coldbergh, in Coverdale, three unfaithful husbands have just undergone the salutary punishment of being forcibly seated on a 'stang' (or pole) hoisted on men's shoulders, and so carried in procession through the villages to the accompaniment of hooting and jeering, Daily Mail (Jan. 21, 1901) 3; n.Yks.² A man or a boy bestrides a stang or pole which is borne on men's shoulders, and paraded in particular before the dwelling of the delinquents; the rider repeating verses applicable to the subject, amid every variety of popular din. e.Yks. Now public opinion is roused, and Jack must be taught that the whole community disapproves of his cruelty. . . An effigy of Jack is tied on a stang (a long pole, though most frequently a ladder), and carried by two men through the village, accompanied by a motley crowd with instruments more famed for sound than music. . . So on the grand procession sweeps, to halt before Jack's door, when, at a given signal, all instrumental music (!) is hushed, while the vocalists have their turn. With voices loud and harsh, they break out, 'Here we come wiv a ran-a-dan-dan, It's neather fo' mah cause nor thy cause that Ah ride this stang, Bud it is fo' Jack Nelson, that Roman-noased man. Come all you good people that live i' this raw, Ah'd ha'e ye tak' warnin', fo' this is oor law; If ony o' you husban's your good wahves do bang, Let 'em come to us, an' we'll rahde 'em the stang.' . . Jack's effigy is carried round the village for three successive nights, and finally burnt in a huge bonfire on the village green, Nicholson Flk. Sp. (1889) 8, 9. w.Yks. 'Ridin t'steng' is taking a pole and placing an effigy of an obnoxious person on it, and carrying it about by way of censuring the individual. Sometimes a living person would be carried. . . Formerly, it is said, the sinner himself was put on the stang, Banks Wkfld. Wds. (1865). Lan. This ceremony was performed at Gorton, in the parish of Manchester, N. & Q. (1876) 5th S. v. 253. Chs.¹ In later times a ladder was often substituted for a pole, and the culprit was represented by someone else, or even by an effigy. 'Whia it's nowt ta ride o watter on' (B.K.). (23) Dev. As we approached the village [Lydford], an unusual hubbub saluted our ears. . . Men, women, and children in holiday attire, were . . . flying before the appearance of two figures, ridiculously apparelled, who were seated back to back upon a donkey, belabouring sometimes each other, sometimes the beast, and sometimes the spectators with a broom and ladle. This noisy procession proceeded with full speed to the banks of the Lyd, when the two figures leaped from their poor little steed, and began with fresh vigour to scatter dismay around. . . An old woman . . . explained to us, that a young couple had quarrelled and fought within the first year of their marriage, and that this was the mode adopted to hold their conduct in derision: the figures on the donkey represented the man and his wife: in fact, it was what in Devonshire parlance is termed 'riding to water,' Evans Home Scenes (1875) 121. Shooting at the latter from the outer ring, if a marble is struck the player may shoot again, so long as he keeps his taw from resting in the centre ring, until the marble first struck, or a nearer one, has been shot out of the larger ring. He then proceeds to shoot at the next nearest marble until he misses, when his taw becomes one of the marbles that may be shot at by the succeeding player. As in billiards, the skill of the game therefore lies in leaving your taw in a good position for your next shot, or in a position of safety as against other players. Lon. I've noticed them, too, playing at ring-taw, Mayhew *Lond. (1) [A ring is formed by the children joining hands. They all dance round, singing the lines. At the word 'Hasher' or 'Atcha' they all raise their hands up and down, and at 'all fall down' they sit suddenly down on the ground... The imitation of sneezing is common to all, Gomme Games (1898) II. 110.] Dur. Gomme ib. 109. w.Yks. Played more especially in Wilsden by girls. Forming a ring, they begin to gyrate, at the same time singing these words:—'Ring-a-ring o' rosies, A bottleful o' posies, Ashum! ashum! ashum!' ad lib. At each 'ashum,' the players jump upwards and throw their heads forward in imitation of one sneezing, and so the singing and concomitant action of the last line (or word) continue till one or more fall down through sheer exhaustion, when they will make a fresh start. When saying 'ashum,' the ring does not gyrate; the players come to a standstill at the word 'posies' in preparation for the jumping. Usually only very small children play this game, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Sept. 19, 1896); w.Yks.$^2$ Lan. They pause and curtsey deeply, Gomme ib. 110. Crn., Stf. ib. Not. They say 'Hashem! Hence Ringit-quoy, sb. an enclosure surrounded by a wall or dike.

Or.I. A ringit quoy is one which has at least originally been of a circular form. But it is conjectured that it has derived its name from being surrounded on all sides by the hill-ground. Far more generally it has the form of a rounded square. The name is properly given to a piece of a common, which has been enclosed, and thus completely detached from the rest, as being fenced by a wall of turf... It is said scornfully to one who has a possession of this kind: 'You have nothing but a ringet-quoy;' as signifying that he has as it were stolen what he calls his property; that he has no right to hill pasturage in common with his neighbours, as not paying scatt for his quoy, and no right to pound the cattle which trespass on this inclosure (Jam.); 'A ringit Quoy' is a phrase quite common among the country people . . . as denoting a property having no rights beyond its dyke, Peterkin Notes (1822) Append. 95; S. & Ork.$^1$

20. To put a ring through the snout of a pig to prevent its routing; used also of a bull; and fig. to restrain.

This game is played by every player except one (the questioner) choosing a word and introducing it into his phrase whenever he gives an answer. For example, X, Y, and Z have chosen the words elephant, key-hole, and mouse-trap. Questioner, 'What did you steal from the parson's hen-roost?' X. 'An elephant.' Q. 'How did you get into the hen-roost?' Y. 'Through the key-hole.' Q. 'Where did you put what was stolen?' Z. 'Into a mouse-trap.' And so on with the other players, Gomme Games (1898) II. 114; The players choose a name, and another player asks them questions, beginning with, 'The parson's hen-roost was robbed last night, were you there?' To all questions each player must answer by repeating his own name only: if he forgets and says 'Yes' or 'No' he has to take the questioner's place, ib. 115.

Nhp.$^1$ Oxf. Efforts were made to keep the men off the rates by the system of going the 'Rounds,' that is to say, a man out of work was kept in turn by the farmers and passed on from one to another, receiving 1s. a day from the parish, Stapleton Three Parishes (1893) 167. Bdf. The increase of population has caused a deficiency of employment, which is so remarkable in some seasons, that a great proportion of the labourers 'go the rounds.' When a labourer can obtain no employment, he applies to the acting overseer, from whom he passes on to the different farmers all round the parish, being employed by each of them after the rate of one day for every £20 rent. The allowance to a labourer on the rounds is commonly 2*d.* per day below the pay of other labourers. Boys receive from 4*d.* to 6*d.* per day on the rounds, Batchelor Agric. (1813) 608.

Hence Roundsman, sb. a labourer who 'goes the rounds.'

Nhp.$^1$ Oxf. The following agreement was come to concerning the Roundsmen, at a general meeting of parishioners in 1799: 'All persons coming to the overseers to be employed by the yard-land shall take a ticket from the overseer to the employer for the payment of his or her money, and for the said persons to come at proper hours or otherwise to be paid according to their hours,' Stapleton Three Parishes (1893) 280. Bdf. It sometimes happens that farmers refuse to take in a roundsman, Batchelor Agric. (1813) 609.

(1) [The children join hands and form a ring with one child standing outside. The ring stands perfectly still throughout this game and sings the verses. . . During the singing of the first verse the outside child dances round the ring. . . When the ring commences to sing the second verse the children hold up their arms to form arches, and the child who has been running round outside runs into the ring under one pair of joined hands, and out again under the next pair of arms, continuing this . . . until the third verse is commenced. . . At the third verse the child stops in the ring and stands facing one, whom she chooses for her lover, until the end of the verse; the chosen child then leaves the ring, followed by the first child, and they walk round the ring, or they walk away a little distance, returning at the commencement of the next verse. 3. v. To pile up; to arrange in small stacks; see below.

n.Yks. When the crop [of clover] is large, a small armful is taken up by the top, which is united by a twist; three of these are placed together, leaning against each other, the end of the twisted part being placed inwards to prevent their opening. This operation is called 'ruckling,' Tuke Agric. (1800) 156. ne.Yks.$^{1}$ To spread out sheaves of 'line' to dry. e.Yks. When the clover is heavy, and hands plentiful, the best mode of making it into hay is to gather it into sheaves soon after it is mown, twisting them together at the top, and opening them out at the bottom, in the form of a sugar-loaf, and then to place them singly along the line of the swathe. In this case, whether the weather prove favourable or otherwise, nothing more is, or can be done to them: they stand there until ready to lead to the stack, and are forked singly into the waggons. This is provincially termed 'ruckling,' Farm Reports, Wauldby (1833) 110. w.Yks. To set a crop of clover and ryegrass up on one end after being cut down. To ruckle it is to tie a band loosely round the top of it and make it stand by spreading the bottom out so that it will dry, and if it rains the water runs off it. Such work as ruckling is nearly out of date now (W.H.). Som. To put turf in stacks. 'Complainant, who lives at Meare, agreed to dig and ruckle defendant's turf at 7*s.* per load and cider' (W.F.R.).

(1) Wm. Probably in former days the rush-bearers were men and women, Graphic (June 22, 1889) 682. (2, a) n.Cy. Grose (1790). Lakel.$^1$ The annual custom in northern parishes still kept up at Ambleside and elsewhere in Wm. of collecting flowers and rushes, and walking in procession to spread them on the floor of the parish church, where they remained as a covering for the whole year. The young girls generally took a part in this. Cum.$^4$ 'What's rush-bearing?' 'Rush-bearing—the barn's rush-bearing—St. Peter's Day,' Caine Hagar (1887) III. 78. Wm. Grasmere Rushbearing. This annual celebration took place on Saturday. . . The garlands were not so numerous or so lavishly dressed with flowers as usual, but there were about a hundred of them, and when arranged round the churchyard wall they looked very pretty. In this position the garlands were left while the children were being regaled with tea. . . At 6.30 they were again claimed, and carried in procession round the village. . . Returning to the church the garlands were arranged round the interior, . . and the wreaths hung upon the walls. Evening service then took place, and the hymns for the rushbearers and S. Oswald used. Service over, each rushbearer received the customary present of two pennyworth of gingerbread, Carlisle Patriot (Aug. 17, 1888); Still continued in many churches. . . It takes place in the month of July, Wordsworth Eccl. Sonnets (1822) pt. iii. son. 32, note. w.Yks. Hutton Tour to Caves (1781); w.Yks.$^1$ On the eve of the Saint, to whom the church was dedicated, it was usual for the parishioners to carry a quantity of rushes, with which to strew the floors of the churches or chapels, which formerly were nothing but common earth. Garlands of flowers were also carried at the same time and hung up till the next yearly festival. This ancient custom is now become nearly obs.; w.Yks.$^3$ An Almondbury feast which occurs on the first Monday in August. In former times . . . a rush-cart was drawn through the town and on the cart were displayed such articles of silver as the neighbours would lend for the purpose; the cart too was attended by persons who danced as it was drawn along. The festival is still kept, but shorn of this observance. . . There was never much to do on the Monday till after the Reform Bill was passed; previously it was all on the Saturday from four till bed-time or so. Lan. Harland & Wilkinson Flk-Lore (1867) 99; Lan.$^1$, ne.Lan.$^1$ e.Lan.$^1$ An annual rustic festival celebrated by sports and all the concomitants of a fair; a cart ornamentally heaped with rushes, and drawn by men gaily dressed, being the principal attraction. s.Lan.$^1$ An old ceremony which usually takes place concurrently with the village 'wakes' or feasts. It had its origin in the long-disused practice of strewing the floors of churches with rushes. . . In later years it became merely a secular pageant. . . The rushes are piled on a gaily-decorated cart and carried about, accompanied by a band of music, flags, and banners, and a company of morris-dancers. Chs. (F.R.C.); Well known at Runcorn and Warburton (W.W.S.); Chs.$^1$ Formerly the rushes were strewed on the floor, presumably for the purposes of warmth; but now the custom takes the form of decorating the walls of the church with flowers and rushes, and laying rushes on the graves of departed friends; hence the custom has also been called Rush-burying; Chs.$^3$ (b) Wm. The 'rush-bearings,' decorated with flowers, and in the shapes of shepherds' crooks or crosses, and brought into the church by a procession of children, and laid on boards along the edges of the pews, Graphic (June 22, 1889) 682. (3) w.Yks.$^2$ A number of young men and girls form themselves into a ring, and a girl sits in the middle of the ring apparently weeping. They march round, singing—'Sally, Sally Slarter, Sitting by the water, Crying out and weeping For a young man. Rise, Sally, rise, Dry up your eyes, Turn to the east, Turn to the west, Turn to the young man That you love the best.' The disconsolate one chooses the young man she loves best, and then they sing—'So now you've got married I hope you'll enjoy Your sons and your daughters, So kiss and good-bye.' Then one of the men sits weeping in the middle of the ring and the verses are repeated, changing 'Sally' to 'Billy' or some other name, and man to girl. Not. Sally, Sally Slauter, Come sprinkle in your can. Why do you get married To a foolish young man? Pick the worst and pick the best, And pick the one that you love best, Gomme ib. Lin. Sally, Sally Salter, Sprinkle in some water, Knock it in a mortar, And send it in a silver saucer To — — door, ib. 157; In the Stixwould version, the child stands in the centre holding in her hands something resembling a saucer; she then pretends to 'knock it in a mortar,' and gives the saucer to the girl whom she chooses. This one exchanges places with her, ib. 167. (4) Cum.$^1$; Cum.$^4$ Girls joining hands formed a ring, and sang the following rhyme, at the end of which they seated themselves on the ground as quickly as they could; an umpire stood in the centre of the ring to decide who was 'last down.' 'Sally, Sally Sober, fry'd in a pan, Last down's weddit, she'll suin git a man.' Another rhyme also sung in chorus was: 'With my ransum, tansum, tissy ma tee, There's nobbut ya man sall ivver kiss me.' (5) Ken. Sally, Sally Wallflower, Sprinkled in the pan, &c. One girl kneels or sits down in the centre and covers her face with her hands as if weeping. The ring dances round and sings the words. The child in the centre rises when the command is given and chooses a boy or girl from the ring, who goes into the centre with her. These two kiss together when the words are said. The child who was first in the centre then joins the ring, the second remaining in the centre, and the game continues. All versions of this game are played in the same way, except slight variations in a few instances. Kissing does not prevail in all the versions, Gomme ib. 167.] Sc. Rise, Sally Walker, Rise if you can; Rise, Sally Walker, and follow your good man; Choose to the east, &c. Kiss, you couple, kiss and be done. A' the many hours to us a happy life, Except —, and he wants a wife. A wife shall he have, And a widower shall he be, Except —, that sits on his knee. Come, choose from the east, Come choose from the west, Come choose out the very one That you love best. Now there's a couple Married in joy, First a girl And then a boy. Now you're married You must obey Every word Your husband says. Take a kiss And walk away, And remember the promise You've made to-day, ib. 153; 'Sally, Sally Walker, sprinkling in a pan, Rye, Sally, rye, Sally, for a young man. Come, choose to the east,' &c. The choice is here made and the two stand in the centre as usual. 'Now there's a couple married in joy,' &c. Bnff. The form of words at Cullen is the same for the first seven lines [as at Tyrie], and then the words are:—'This young couple be married and be done. A' the men in oor toon leads a happy life, Except — and he wants a wife. A wife he shall have and a widow she shall be, Except [a girl's name] that sits on his knee, Painting her face and curling her hair, Kissing [a girl's name] at the foot o' the stair,' ib. 162. Abd. [At Tyrie] Arise, Sally Walker, arise if you can, Arise, Sally Walker, and follow your good man. Come, choose to the east, &c. [The Christian name of a girl] made a pudding so nice and sweet, [Boy's Christian name] took a knife and tasted it. Taste, love, taste, love, don't say No, The next Sunday morning To church we shall go. Clean the brazen candlesticks And clean the fireside, Draw back the curtains And lat's see the bride. A' the men in oor toon leads a happy life, Except [a boy's full name] and he wants a wife. A wife shall he hae, and a widow she shall be, For look at [a girl's full name] diddling on's knee. He paints her cheeks and he curls her hair, And he kisses the lass at the foot of the stair, ib. 161–2; [At Aberdeen Training College] Rise, Sally Walker, rise if you can, &c. Loving each other like sister and brother, And so they may be kissed together, Cheese and bread for gentlemen, And corn and hay for horses, A cup of tea for a' good wives And bonnie lads and lassies. When are we to meet again? And when are we to marry? Raffles up and raffles down and raffles a' a-dancin', The bonniest lassie that ever I saw Was [child in the centre] dancin', ib. 163; [At Fraserburgh] Little Sally Walker sitting on the sand, Crying and weeping for a young man; Rise, Sally, rise, Sally, wipe away your tears. Try for the east and try for the west, Try for the (little) very one you love best, &c., ib. 159. Frf., Per. Sally, Sally Walker sitting in the sun, Weeping and wailing for a young man, Rise, Sally, rise, and wipe away your tears, Fly to the east, fly to the west, And fly to the very one that you love best. Uncle John is very sick, He goes a courting night and day; Sword and pistol by his side, Little Sally is his bride; He takes her by the lily white hand, He leads her over the water; Now they kiss and now they clap, Mrs. Molly's daughter, ib. 163. Ant. Hie Sally Walker, hie Sally Ken, Hie Sally Walker, follow young men. Choose to the east, choose to the west, Choose to the bonny lad that you like best.' The girl in the middle then takes the young man of her choice, and the rest sing—'Now ye're married I wish you joy, First a girl and then a boy. Seven years over, seven years to come, Now is your time to kiss and be done.' They then kiss and go out, to give place to another couple, the game going on as before. Cum.$^4$ Oh, Sally Sally Waters, why do you lie mourning For sake of your young man?

Come pick one, come choose one, Come pick the very best, Those nice and fair young damsels, That lie upon your breast. (Here one is chosen.) Now Sally's got married, I hope she will enjoy A son and a daughter, A kiss and a smile. nw.Yks. [At Settle] Sally, Sally Walker, tinkle in a can, Rise up, Sally, and choose a young man. Look to the east, &c., Gomme ib. 160. w.Yks. [At Wakefield] A little boy or a girl personating a boy is placed in the centre of a circle of girls who sing :—'Sally Water, Sally Water, Springin' in a pan ; Cry, Sally, cry, Sally, For a young man ; Choose for the worst un, Choose for the best un, Choose for the little gell 'at you love the best.' The one in the middle then chooses one of the girls from the ring, whilst the rest sing :—'Now you're married I wish you joy, First a girl And then a boy, Seven years after Son and daughter, Pray, young couple, come kiss together.' Then the two in the centre kiss and the boy goes out to take his place in the circle, leaving the girl alone in the centre, N. & Q. (1875) 5th S. iii. 481 ; Sally-Warty—a children's game, joined in by both sexes, *Leeds Merc. [And putte a saly stake in it with crafte, Palladius Husb. (c. 1420) xii. 139. OE. sealh, a willow.]

SALLY, sb.$^{3}$ Mid. [sæ·li.] An inferior fruit basket; perhaps so named from being made of 'sally.' See Sally, sb.$^{2}$

He used for inferior fruit . . . a cheaper and commoner form of basket, such as the dealers call 'Sallies.' These are of no especial measure, but hold on the average about half a bushel, some of them much more, and some a little less, and there is no name marked upon them, Blackmore Kit (1890) II. vii.

SALLY, sb.$^{4}$ and v.$^{1}$ Yks. Nhp. War. Wor. Hrf. Glo. Bdf. Dor. Dev. [sa·li, sæ·li.] 1. sb. The lower fluffy portion of a bell-rope.

War.$^{3}$ The coloured woolly material woven on the rope as a rest for the hand and a guide for the eye in ringing. When the bells are set (raised) 'hand stroke' the sally is on a level, or nearly so, with the ringer. When they are set 'back stroke' the sally is raised to the top or through the belfry ceiling, part of the rope being then wound round the bell-wheel. The position of the sally is therefore an important indication to ringers of the position in which the bells had been left at the last peal, and of the care required if they had been left set, and of the delicacy required in moving them. s.Wor.$^{1}$ Mainly used in chiming. se.Wor.$^{1}$, Hrf.$^{2}$, Glo.$^{1}$ Bdf. Batchelor Anal. Eng. Lang. (1809) 142; N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 186. Dor. Bright red 'sallies' of woollen texture—soft to the hands and easily caught—glowed on the ropes in place of the old ragged knots, Hardy Remedies (1871) Epilogue. e.Dev. The tuftin being worn, she hurt a man's hands a good deal on the sally, Jane Lordship (1897) 66.

Hence (1) Sally-beam, (2) -hole, sb. a beam in the belfry of a church, through which the bell-rope passes.

(1) Bdf. The sally-beam is a beam at some distance from the floor, through which the bell-rope is passed to steady it. It is, I suppose, so called because the 'sally' never passes beyond it, N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 186; (J.W.B.) (2) w.Yks. He wor drawn up bit bell an knocked his heead again t'sally-hoil, Tom Treddlehoyle Bairnsla Ann. (1851).

2. A term in bell-ringing; see below.

Nhp.$^{1}$ Sally and backstroke. Bdf. The word of command is often given 'set next sally' or 'change next sally,' meaning that the bells are to be rung round once and then set or changed, N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 186.

3. v. To ring bells in a particular manner, to 'set.'

War.$^{3}$ In the sense of sallying the bells, nearly obs. Wor. (E.S.) [As bells, Sally'd awhile, at once their pale renew, Somerville Chace (1735) bk. ii. l. 249–50.]

SALLY, v.$^{2}$ and sb.$^{5}$ Sc. Nhb. Lakel. Yks. Nhp. e.An. Sus. Also in form saully Sc. (Jam. Suppl.) [sa·li, sæ·li.] 1. v. To move or run from side to side; to sway a boat; see below.

Sc. To move or run from side to side as children do in certain games, and as workmen do on board a ship after it is launched; to rock or swing from side to side like a small boat at anchor; to rise and fall like a ship on a rough sea (Jam. Suppl.). N.Cy.$^{1}$ As is customary with the persons on board of a ship after she is launched. Nhb.$^{1}$ To sway a boat or ship, in play, from side to side. In a boat it is done by standing on a seat, with legs astride, and alternately resting the weight on each leg so as to sway the boat. Formerly, at the launch of a wooden ship, it was customary for the apprentices from the yard to be on deck, and, when the vessel was launched, to sally her. This was done by a rush or sally to one side, which caused a lurch. A rush back again brought her over to the other side, and this continued, the displacement of the weight on deck causing an alternate swing from side to side. Nhp.$^{1}$

2. To pitch forward. e.An.$^{1}$ 3. Of a bird: to glide through the air on motionless wings. e.Yks.$^{1}$ 4. With out: to walk with an idle, trailing gait. Lakel.$^{2}$ 5. sb. A run from side to side; a rush, dash; a swaying, swinging motion; a tottering situation.

Sc. A continuous rising and falling, a sail in a small boat over rough water; the swinging or bounding motion of a ship at sea (Jam. Suppl.). Sus.$^{2}$

6. A swing for children. Nrf. Arch. VIII. 172. 7. Comp. Sally-oot, an idle, aimless walk.

The coops are generally built in sets of two or three, and would occupy the whole breadth of the stream if confined between say the bank and an island, but for the Fishery Act which obliges the owners to leave a free or Queen's gap, so that some fish at least may pass onwards. SALOOP, sb. Obs. Lan. War. Lon. Also in forms saleb Lon.; salep War.$^{3}$ Lon.; salop Lon. A beverage; see below.

s.Lan.$^{1}$ A warm drink which was largely sold at street-stalls in Manchester. It was made by pouring hot water on a powdered preparation of the root of the Orchis mascula, with the addition of sugar and milk. War.$^{3}$ The roots of King Fingers (Orchis morio and O. mascula) were formerly used to make a beverage called Saloop and sold in the Birmingham Market Hall. Thirty or forty years ago the sign over small shop doors 'Early Saloop' was by no means infrequent in the less important streets of Birmingham. These shops were much resorted to by workmen beginning work at an early hour. Lon. The greasy-looking beverage which Charles Lamb's experience of London at early morning satisfied him was of all preparations the most grateful to the stomach of the then existing climbing-boys, viz. 'Sa-loop,' Mayhew Lond. Labour (1851) I. 8; A starch procured principally from orchid tubers and was largely exported to this country from the East before the discovery of coffee. It is made up in small yellow balls, which are ground to a fine powder before being used... It ... was sold ready prepared in the early morning to the working classes of London... The term saloop was also applied to an infusion of the sassafras bark or wood... Saloop in balls is still sold in London, N. & Q. (1889) 7th S. vii. 35. [Salep is a preparation of the root of Orchis or Dogstones, Hunter Georgical Essays (1803) II. 353. The starchy roots of Orchis morio and O. mascula supplied the material for saloop, which was a kind of gruel sold at stalls and houses of refreshment, N. & Q. ib.]
